

Abstract

The present invention relates to a cartridge for use with a digital printing device. The cartridge includes a first casing portion for housing print media and a second casing 5 portion for housing a supply of ink. The ink supply is formed by having the second casing portion segregated into distinct chambers for storing a supply of different colored inks, with each ink storage chamber having a corresponding ink outlet closed with a pierceable seal.